

CIO OFFICE MORNING MARKET WRAP 18 June 2025

Markets came under pressure Tuesday as tensions between Israel and Iran continued to escalate and concerns mounted over potential US involvement. President Trump escalated rhetoric toward Iran on Tuesday, demanding "unconditional surrender" sparking fresh speculation that the US could be preparing to join in on the conflict. His comments came after Tehran rejected a nuclear accord and the White House confirmed evacuation efforts in the region. Markets responded cautiously, with oil holding gains and risk appetite remaining subdued. The G7 summit concluded without a unified stance, and geopolitical concerns stayed elevated. As Federal Reserve officials met in Washington for the first day of their two-day gathering, expectations held for nearly two quarter-point cuts by yearend, with the first fully priced in for October. Policymakers are widely expected to keep rates unchanged for a fourth consecutive meeting, maintaining a wait-and-see stance as they assess the impact of earlier fiscal shifts, including tariffs. Officials may adjust language around the economic outlook, and projections could still include two rate cuts this year, though the updated dot plot might show fewer. Attention will center on Powell's post-meeting remarks, especially given recent inflation moderation and political pressure. Elsewhere, US regulators are preparing to ease a capital rule that affects big banks' ability to trade Treasuries. The Federal Reserve, FDIC, and OCC are looking to lower the enhanced supplementary leverage ratio (eSLR) for major institutions like JPMorgan, Goldman Sachs, and Morgan Stanley. The revised buffer could drop from 5% to as low as 3.5% for holding companies. While the move is intended to support liquidity in the $29 trillion Treasury market, critics warn it may weaken financial safeguards. The Fed will meet on June 25 to consider the proposal, which may also ask whether Treasuries should be excluded from leverage calculations. US retail sales dropped 0.9% in May, the sharpest decline since early 2025 and the second straight monthly fall. Weakness was broad-based, led by autos, building materials, and gas. Spending at restaurants also declined. Consumers showed signs of retrenching, with spending skewing toward essentials and confidence appearing fragile amid persistent cost pressures.

European stocks moved lower with the MSCI Europe index falling 0.9%. Energy names posted modest gains but the broader market declined as markets digested political risk and trade headwinds. A surprise jump in German investor expectations failed to lift sentiment. Safe-haven flows continued into bunds and the euro was little changed. Chinese equities edged down with MSCI China slipping 0.2%. Innovation-linked names gained following strong clinical trial news in the brain tech sector but the broader market struggled under the weight of geopolitical uncertainty and rare earth supply concerns. Property shares lagged. Trading volume was thin and conviction low as markets awaited more clarity on macro policy and US-China dynamics. Rare earth exports from China continued to decline, prompting concerns across global manufacturing. Reports had indicated G7 nations may present a diversification framework to reduce dependence on China. Shares of non-Chinese producers rose as a result. Beijing signaled it would maintain control over outbound shipments of strategic materials, adding to the broader theme of supply chain reshuffling. Japan's TOPIX rose 0.4% after the Bank of Japan reaffirmed its accommodative stance. Officials hinted at more flexible bond operations and said policy settings would remain supportive. The yen weakened, giving exporters a lift. Banks and semiconductor stocks led gains. Within commodities, brent crude climbed 4.4% to $76.5 per barrel as continued Israel-Iran tensions remained in focus and Washington signaled a firmer posture toward Tehran. Gold ended flat at $3,388 an ounce. The 10-year Treasury yield declined six basis points to 4.39% as safe-haven demand persisted. The dollar gained 0.5%.

Markets this morning

Today, oil held near a five-month high. WTI extended gains in Asia trading. Equity markets in the region were mixed. Japan advanced, supported by monetary policy stability. China and Hong Kong slipped. The dollar was steady and Treasuries held recent strength. Futures on the S&P 500 edged up slightly, though sentiment remained cautious ahead of the Fed decision.

Upcoming key events/data

Key events and data ahead include the Fed and Brazil rate decisions, UK and Eurozone CPI, and Japan trade figures. Thursday brings decisions from Indonesia, Switzerland, and the UK. China's loan prime rate and Canadian retail sales data are due Friday.

Best Regards,

Chief Investment Office Wealth Management Emirates NBD.
