

CIO OFFICE MORNING MARKET WRAP

2 May 2025

A whiff of US exceptionalism lifted US markets for an eighth straight session as large IT megacaps led gains on strong earnings, while the dollar rose on improving trade newsflow. Microsoft and Meta Platforms jumped after beating both on top and bottom line, breaking the ‘sell America’ narrative, and the dollar joined in on reports the Trump administration reached out to China for trade talks. President Trump considered easing trade restrictions on sales of Nvidia’s chips to the UAE, keen to pursue its AI ambitions, and Nvidia jumped 2.5% on the news. The S&P 500 gained over 0.6%, while the Nasdaq topped returns climbing 1.5%. Communication services, information technology and consumer discretionaries led the broader market, the usual pattern in the heydays of US stocks. General Motors cut its full-year outlook on exposure to auto tariffs, MacDonald’s fell after missing on Q1 sales, and Qualcomm dropped after the company gave a tepid forecasts citing tariffs hurting demand. DMequities ex-US saw some profit taking, ending 0.8% lower for the session, while EM stocks closed little changed. Treasuries were pressured lower following an ISM manufacturing release whose details were stronger than the headline number would suggest. Losses extended after President Trump’s comments on sanctions on Iran due to delayed nuclear talks. The Treasury curve bear-flattened, as the yield on the 2-year note ended 10bps higher, and the 10-year rose by 6bps to 4.2%. Gold continued to fall on reduced trade uncertainty, while Brent crude broke a three-day string of losses on the Iran news. The yen fell sharply against the dollar after the BOJ said it would take longer to reach the inflation target. On the geopolitical front there was some progress, as the US and Ukraine reached a deal over the country’s access to natural resources, offering reassurance to Kyiv the US would not pull back in peace talks with Russia.

Business confidence surveys in the United States saw the sector mired in stagnation. Like the initial S&P Global Manufacturing release, the ISM did not budge much, lingering slightly below the 50 mark for the second consecutive month. Details were anyway better than feared, with prices lower, and orders and employment readings higher than forecast. In absolute terms activity subcomponents remained muted and prices elevated, that would be pointing to stagflationary conditions down the road.

Markets this morning:

Optimism prevailed in the Asian morning session after China said it is evaluating trade talks with the US, that saw the MSCI Asia Pacific advance by 0.9%, and futures on the S&P 500 reverse earlier losses to trade 0.8% higher. Japan rose 0.7% on comments from the country’s chief trade negotiator. Japan would aim to achieve an agreement with the US in June, with discussions possibly gaining momentum in mid-May. The US dollar fluctuated, Treasuries fell, while gold was on track for its first back-to-back weekly loss for the year. Apple and Amazon reported in late-hour trading. Apple fell 3.8% after reporting sales from China that declined more than anticipated, overshadowing otherwise solid results. Amazon slumped 3.2% in after-hours as its operating income forecast missed expectations. Today investors will be looking forward to the US jobs report. Employment growth is expected to have decelerated to a nonfarm payroll increase of 138,000 in April, with unemployment seen steady at 4.2%. Though no rate cut is in the cards guidance will be closely watched as the Fed may feel pressured to prioritise the full-employment side of its dual mandate. US Treasury Bessent said the bond market is suggesting the Fed should be easing since the yield on the 2-year note, currently at around 3.7%, has been trading well below the Fed funds rate, now at 4.33%.

Upcoming key events/data:

Today’s highlight will be the US jobs report expected to signal a slowdown in the labor market. Exxon will be reporting Q1 results. In the euro area CPI and employment numbers will be closely watched as well.
