

CIO OFFICE MORNING MARKET WRAP 16 October 2025

Good earnings, a floated truce with China, more dovish Fedspeak kept markets afloat in the absence of tier 1 hard data providing cues for direction. And, after all, why even look into hard data, if bad news could suddenly become good news in light of more liquidity readily available from the Fed? This is at least by and large the impression we get from the latest dovish declarations by Fed officials including chair Powell. At a micro level so far earnings are delivering with investor's focus more on guidance than backward-looking numbers. And, yes, the US-China trade relation remains volatile and unpredictable, so why not invest in stocks if Scott Bessent proposes a mini deal on tariffs buying the administration and investors time? As long as economic momentum does not enter negative territory, the backdrop of slowing growth and moderate inflation has something positive to dispense to everybody. This is all coming with a twist, though, as gold has been making relentless new all-time highs, reminding us that the maths of unsustainable debt loads points to negative real rates in the end crushing bondholders. Gold gaining over 60% in a year does not belong in a Goldilocks scenario, rather in a scenario where debt will have to be inflated away. And whoever claims that gold does not pay yield, so is not an appealing asset, in our view fails to see that Treasury yields will be eventually capped under conditions of financial repression, and that is exactly what investors are fleeing from, the perspective of yields not worth cashing in. Also, even as the rebound unfolded, the VIX Index, the implied volatility on the S&P 500 also used as a fear gauge, hovered at the upper end of the range established since June this year. Why can't the market get much quieter despite so much dovish Fedspeak? But now, from conjectures back to the usual mundane performance statistics. The S&P 500 traded up as much as +1.2% to then moderate gains (+0.4%) with real estate topping returns (+1.5%) and materials (-0.5%) lagging in negative territory, though small caps once more outperformed (+1%). In Treasuries the longer-end of the curve kept in listless trade, while at the shorter end yields ticked higher. The US dollar (-0.24%) weakened, gold (+1.5%) set again a new peak, while Brent crude (-0.8%) slipped below USD62.

Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent offered China an olive branch disguised at times in stern words. He proposed a longer pause on high US tariffs on Chinese goods in exchange for Beijing putting off the plan to tighten its grip on rare earths, while also mentioning a "fulsome" global response to China. Equities extended gains after his comments, while rare earths stocks retreated. He confirmed the willingness to continue negotiate, with Trump "a go" on his forthcoming meeting with Xi in South Korea. On another note, he also rejected the idea that the rising price of gold reflects fundamental concerns about the dollar. And how could the United States Treasury Secretary say something different? We beg to differ and stick with what previously mentioned on the topic.

Dovish Fedspeak has multiplied of late, that is bullish stocks. On Tuesday Jay Powell said labor market prospects have continued to worsen and that the shrinking of the Fed's balance sheet may be stopped in the months ahead. This smells of easing both on rates and asset purchases. Vice Chair for Supervision Bowman said she continues to see two more cuts for the year, and Boston Fed's Collins said the central bank should continue lowering rates. And, yes, new FOMC member Steven Miran remains uber-dovish. Money markets have taken the various statements at face value and now see rates fall to 3% by 2026-end, a boon for risk assets as long a sharp slowdown is avoided. And the nationwide Fed's survey on economic conditions called Beige Book released yesterday quite accommodates this view. Economic activity was seen little changed lately, consumer spending edging lower, though prices continued to rise under the effect of tariffs.

Morgan Stanley shares jumped +4.7%, among the top gainers on the S&P 500, after the company reported Q3 earnings and revenue above market expectations. Bank of America also reported higher Q3 earnings and revenue, beating consensus estimates. Its shares advanced 4.4%, also among the outperformers in the S&P 500. ASML Holding NV said demand for its most sophisticated chip-making machines is soaring thanks to the artificial intelligence boom. Its shares rose by 3.1% in Europe.

Markets this morning:

Asian stocks (+0.7%) rose following a volatile session on Wall Street with US-China trade tensions in the foreground. Shares rose in Japan, Australia, and South Korea, while Chinese equities opened marginally lower. Gold soared above USD4,225/oz, as friction between the US and China and the outlook for rate cuts lured investors. The US Dollar Index slipped for a third day, while Treasuries were little changed. Yesterday comments at the opposite end of the spectrum from President Trump, that said that the two countries were locked in a trade war, and Treasury Secretary Bessent's suggestion of a longer-term truce, whipsawed US markets.

Upcoming key events/data:

The Philadelphia Fed outlook is scheduled for release today alongside Taiwan Semiconductors full-quarter results.

Have a great day!
