CIO OFFICE MORNING MARKET WRAP

15 September 2025

There was no shortage of depressing events last week, from Israeli bombs striking Qatar to Russian drones in Poland and a political assassination in the US. For the investment world however, it was another very positive week. As the stalling of US employment is now certain, confirmed by rising jobless claims, the only obstacle standing between markets and their favourite antidepressant – rate cuts- is the inflation risk. August factory gate prices (PPI) surprised positively; consumer prices (CPI) came out slightly on the hotter side, but it wasn't due to tariffs/goods, and the core measure, the most relevant for the Fed, was in line with forecast at +2.9% year over year. There is little doubt, if any, that the Fed will cut rates this week and most probably signal an intention to ease in the quarters to come.
All asset classes delivered positive returns in dollars last week – even more so as the dollar itself weakened by another -0.2% to now -10% year to date. Gold gained +1.6% to another all time high, stocks from emerging markets rallied +4% led by China while their developed peers gained +1.5% with the US and Japan outperforming. The entire fixed income asset class was sought after, with the US 10-year briefly trading below 4% and spreads staying at very tight levels. Oil prices logically rose, up 2.2% to $67 for the Brent following the Israeli aggression in Doha. Elsewhere, France's sovereign rating was logically downgraded by Fitch to A+ from AA- and the ECB didn't surprise anyone by keeping interest rates on hold. By contrast, Oracle stunned the world with AI revenue projections from another world that sent the stock price almost 40% higher in a day, making founder Ellison the world's richest man.

With regards to our positioning, we had cut both bonds (to neutral) and stocks (to underweight on developed markets, neutral on emerging) 10 days ago , considering that fixed income doesn't price in any inflation risk, and that equities do not price in any slowdown risk. Time will tell whether it's right, but in the meantime our profiles are doing extremely well with year to date returns between +10 and +15% . We owe it to our constant overweight in gold, which we maintained, to our active management of duration in fixed income and to generous allocation on EM stocks, especially China, which we have just cut from overweight to neutral.

Markets this morning:
Asian markets are just opening as we write this morning: equities are quiet yet overall positive from Hong-Kong and China to Korea, despite underwhelming retail sales and industrial production having just been released for China, where the unemployment rate also came out slightly higher than expected at 5.3%.

Upcoming key events/data:
The week starts with trade talks between the US and China – let's hope that they will be constructive, at a time when the US is pushing for more tariffs on all buyers of Russian oil, which may or may not be the right way to get the peace agreement that we all pray for. The future of Tik Tok in the US will also be discussed. Several major central banks will meet, including the Bank of England, the BoJ, the Bank of Canada, but all eyes will be on the Fed's FOMC conclusion this Wednesday. We expect a 25 basis points easing, even if President Trump expects a "big cut". They will also importantly update their projections in terms of growth, inflation, employment, as well as for interest rates through the dot-plot. Emphasis may switch from tariffs-related inflation risks to the labour market. At a time of challenge regarding the Fed's independence, we believe that they will resist pressure to cut by 50 basis points, especially as they have the opportunity to clarify the way forward with their guidance and projections. We will also look at retail sales and industrial production for the US, and at the ZEW survey in Germany, among other data.

Have a great day.
