

CIO OFFICE MORNING MARKET WRAP – Monday July 27th, 2020. ALSO AVAILABLE ON ALEXA

Last week was better for defensive assets than for cyclical ones. Despite good Q2 corporate results being published, the rise in US initial jobless claims and a fading consumer confidence in Europe were indications of a deceleration in the pace of the recovery, at a time when the virus continues to spread in the US.

Rising tensions between the US and China, exacerbated by the current electoral context, added to concerns and this is also how the week starts on international markets. Beijing this morning said the US breached diplomatic conventions when they entered, last week, their consulate in Houston Texas.

Risk assets didn't really fall but safe havens were sought after, should they be safe bonds or of course Gold. The precious metal keeps on rising this morning in Asia: the ounce just reached $1930 which is simply its all-time high. We are overweight on Gold, even if we took partial profits no later than 2 weeks ago as it was by far our largest overweight and by far the best performing asset class of 2020 so far.

Our recommended weight averages 5% across our three tactical asset allocation profiles, still among our strongest convictions even if we are above what we think its fair value is.

Staying in Asia this morning, stocks are overall mixed and confirm that so far market participants are worried, but far from panicking. Japanese shares fall as a catch-up after a holiday last week. China and Hong-Kong are flat to slightly up, simply ignoring the geopolitical escalation, while Taiwan is sharply up, turbocharged by upbeat quarterly numbers from Taiwan Semiconductor, up 10%.

Oil prices are perfectly stable with the Brent future contract unchanged at $43.3, which comes after an overall positive session in our domestic markets across Dubai, Abu Dhabi and Saudi Arabia exchanges.

The virus keeps on spreading on the American continent and investors will closely watch early indications of a stabilization. Last week saw daily infection numbers in the US reaching their worst levels since the outbreak started, and risk assets didn't really react.

As our scenario is that there is no reason that the situation will not get better there like it did everywhere else, following a First In First Out logic, there might be a potentially positive catalyst there. This is unsurprisingly what President Trump also expects: he said that "the picture is very positive and I still think the V-shaped recovery is in place". Our view is that the recovery has indeed started, but that its trajectory may keep on being questioned which should generate turbulences in the coming months, which could provide opportunities to add risk as we are not pessimistic on the medium term. Actually Mr Trump may manage to find a solution to the imminent expiry, this week, of the $600 per week federal boost to unemployment insurance. This would without a doubt support markets and this possibility probably explains why the current concerns did not have more impact.

The week ahead will keep on being rich of corporate earnings, including the largest companies in the world such as Apple, Amazon or Alphabet. On the economic front, US second quarter GDP will be released on Thursday while China PMI data will come on Friday.

The US Federal Reserve will hold its monthly Committee on Tuesday and make an announcement on Wednesday. We would be surprised to hear anything else than a dovish commitment to provide more support if needed and probably some encouragement to maintain the current extraordinary fiscal support in the US.

Stay safe.
