

CIO OFFICE MORNING MARKET WRAP – Thursday 28th of May, 2020. ALSO AVAILABLE ON ALEXA.

The main US equity benchmarks closed the session in positive territory, with a marked divergence between the Dow Industrials, +2.2%, and the Nasdaq Composite, +0.77%, pointing to value outperforming growth stocks. This was echoed by strong gains for the European indices, more heavily skewed towards cyclical sectors.

The bid for value unfolded around a narrative of more economies reopening without a resurgence in infections and governments stepping up stimulus efforts. While the UK is just looking to start to ease lockdowns, all of 50 US states are reopening in some form or fashion and the European countries are making plans for a summer tourist season under social distancing measures.

Investors cheered the big step forward taken by Europe, with the proposal of a €750bn rescue fund providing grants for the countries hardest hit by the virus. If approved by all member states, it would take the European Union in the direction of a united bond market. The euro reacted positively touching an almost 2-month high against the US dollar. European news came on top of Japan's doubling down on stimulus measures, with the approval on Wednesday of a $1.1trn package aimed at helping businesses and households weather the pandemic crisis. In the background tensions between the US and China continued to simmer. Hong Kong police shot pepper balls against demonstrators and Washington's declarations about Hong Kong no longer being autonomous from the mainland opened the door to further sanctions against China.

The Chinese Yuan onshore rate reached its weakest level since 2008. President Trump found reason for voicing anger against social media companies on US shores, after Twitter added fact-check warnings to some of his tweets. Today investors are not so much likely to focus on backward-looking economic gauges like US Q1 GDP, as on April Orders for Durable goods, leading factory production, and Jobless Claims.

Stay Safe.
