

CIO OFFICE MORNING MARKET WRAP – Monday November 29, 2021. ALSO AVAILABLE ON ALEXA

Last week ended with global equities falling 2.2% on Friday as markets reacted to news of South Africa reporting cases of the Omicron variant of the coronavirus. Countries were quick to limit travel to/ from South Africa and a few other African countries and the new mobility restrictions led to oil falling and worries about lockdowns and the effect on economic growth. GCC markets opened sharply down yesterday with the Dubai Index falling 5.2%, the KSA almost as much and the Abu Dhabi Index 1.8%. The most impacted were Dubai real estate stocks and KSA banks and consumer stocks. Saudi Aramco stock was resilient in spite of oil falling 11.5% on Friday.

The markets after the sharp reaction to the Omicron virus variant news on Friday, are calmer this morning as little data is as yet available on its impact and severity though reports from South Africa are that symptoms of the new variant appear to be “mild”.

The WHO said understanding the new variant will take days to several weeks. This morning in Asia, Hong Kong stocks are trading a percent down while mainland China and Japan equities are flat. US 10 year yields are up 6 bps to 1.53%. Traders last week pushed back the expected timing of a first 25-basis-point rate hike by the Fed to July from June. Not much change in gold which is trading at $1795. Oil is up 5% with Brent futures at $76. This week OPEC and its allies, will meet to assess production policy. The alliance is moving two technical meetings to give its committees more time to evaluate the impact of the virus. The OPEC and broader OPEC+ meetings will go ahead as planned on Wednesday and Thursday. OPEC+ could take a cautious stance when deciding whether to go ahead with the 400,000 barrels a day output increases, as per analysts.

Our focus remains on the Omicron virus variant, but we await more conclusive data before drawing conclusions about the impact on health, economies & markets. There is little insight on the variants severity, transmissibility and the efficacy of current vaccines. Even before the variant news impacted markets on Friday, last week had seen volatility with transition expected on Central Bank policy & the reduction of unprecedented monetary support. This brings in a new market environment in a backdrop of uneven global recovery & the different regional responses to the virus. Above trend growth has taken equity markets to new heights as well as created not so transitional inflationary pressure which remains an important market driver along with the impact on economic activity from any renewed lockdowns as support from infinite liquidity and incredibly favourable real rates slows. However, governments have been quick to respond with fiscal largesse if the situation requires and expect them to follow the same pattern, if required. We remain overweight equities and underweight the safer fixed income space with an overweight on gold to hedge inflation concerns.

The virus impact and reaction of governments to COVID has been varied, though more selective lockdowns are possible. China, Hong Kong, and Taiwan have maintained a Covid-zero strategy. which limits the near-term economic impact but delays reopening efforts and a rebound in consumption growth. Australia, Japan, Korea, and Singapore have started to adopt a strategy of living with Covid but are quick to impose travel restrictions. India and ASEAN tend to tighten restrictions when cases rise sharply. Even before news of Omicron, Austria had already begun lockdowns and in the highly vaccinated regions: the U.S. U.K. and the UAE vaccine booster shots are being strongly encouraged. On the vaccine development front Moderna said a reformulated shot to combat the new strain could be available in early 2022.

Key events this week include Fed Chair Powell and Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen speaking in the U.S. Senate, Tuesday. Wednesday, they front the House Financial Services Committee. Eurozone CPI and China PMIs, Tuesday. Eurozone and China Caixin manufacturing PMI's , Wednesday. U.S. November jobs report, Friday. Stay safe.
